Postgraduate programs

The Australian National University (ANU) School of Art provides a stimulating environment in which students can extend their skills through postgraduate study. Programs are available in Art History and Curatorial Studies, Design, Digital Arts and Visual Arts. Specialist study can be undertaken in a range of disciplines: Art History, Art Theory, Ceramics, Design, Digital Media, Furniture, Glass, Gold and Silversmithing, Painting, Photomedia, Printmedia and Drawing, Sculpture and Textiles.

Which program is for me?

There are two principal modes of study for postgraduate students at the ANU School of Art: Graduate Coursework and Graduate Research.

Within these programs there is a wide range of options designed to meet differing needs.

- > Coursework programs include Graduate Certificate, Masters and Masters (Advanced). These programs vary in length from 6 months to 2 years full-time and are arranged around semester-based courses.
- > Research programs involve a 2 to 4-year full-time research project resulting in either a Master of Philosophy (MPhil) or Doctor of Philosophy (PhD). Students construct a project under the supervision of a panel whose expertise encompasses practice and theory. The MPhil and PhD programs also include compulsory coursework components.
- > Part-time study is available in all programs.

Students entering Coursework programs are generally seeking a program where they can incrementally broaden and update their skills with the option of progressing to further study.

Research students are generally seeking an environment in which to undertake a substantial research project over an extended period of time.

What are the entry requirements?

Entry requirements vary across the postgraduate programs with previous academic study, experience and expertise in the field all taken into account. Visit the links below for more information.
